2015 COMMUNITY SURVEY RESULTS

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA IS ONE OF SIX PILOT SITES FOR THE NATIONAL Initiative for Building Community Trust and Justice, a project to improve relationships and increase trust between communities and the criminal justice system and advance the public and scholarly understandings of the issues contributing to those relationships. In collaboration with the U.S. Department of Justice, the National Initiative is coordinated by the National Network for Safe Communities at John Jay College of Criminal Justice, with partnership from the Justice Collaboratory at Yale Law School, the Center for Policing Equity at John Jay College and UCLA, and the Urban Institute.

The National Initiative's work involves trust-building interventions with police departments and communities based on three pillars:

- Enhancing procedural justice: the way police interact with the public, and how those interactions shape the public's views of the police and their engagement in co-producing public safety.
- Reducing the impact of implicit bias: the automatic associations individuals make between groups of people and stereotypes about those groups, and the influence it has in policing.
- Fostering reconciliation: frank engagements between minority communities and law enforcement to address historical tensions, misconceptions, and mutual mistrust.

Creating a Baseline for Evaluation

As part of the National Initiative's commitment to evaluating the effectiveness of its interventions, the Urban Institute surveyed residents from Pittsburgh's highest-crime neighborhoods regarding their perceptions of and attitudes toward criminal activity and the police department. The surveys were conducted through face-to-face interviews in fall 2015.

The following are highlights from the survey that show the distrust of law enforcement held by these communities, but also the potential for improved relationships given community residents' willingness to work with police to improve public safety. They also provide a baseline from which the National Initiative will build new, or further tailor existing, interventions in Pittsburgh, and ultimately measure the impact of those interventions.

If you are interested in getting involved, or have suggestions, questions, or comments about the National Initiative, please reach out to us at info@trustandjustice.org or contact the National Initiative's Pittsburgh Site Liaison, Commander Eric Holmes, at eric.holmes@pittsburghpa.gov or (412) 323-7814. DISTRUST AND DISTANCE

Only 33% of community members from Pittsburgh's highest-crime neighborhoods support how the police act in the community

think police use excessive force against residents

20%
believe police officers are held accountable for wrong or inappropriate conduct

63%
feel that police officers will treat them differently because of their race/ethnicity

21%
believe that police officers almost always behave according to the law when dealing with people

COMMON GROUND AND POTENTIAL FOR PARTNERSHIP

75% believe all laws should be strictly followed

78% think that obeying the law ultimately benefits everyone in the community

81%
would call the police to report a crime

68%
would provide information to the police to help find a suspect

49%
would volunteer time to help the police solve a crime or find a suspect

64%
would attend a community meeting with the police to discuss crime in the neighborhood

Survey items were based on a 5-point scale, and the percentages shown are of residents who answered 4 or 5, with 5 being either Strongly Agree (Distrust and Distance, But Common Ground) or Very Likely (And Potential for Partnership).
